ABSTRACT

This document reports a study of faculty professionalism beyond the university classroom at the University of San Francisco. Data were collected concerning professional listing rate by rank; faculty variables; faculty characteristics; scholarship/professional service items; frequency and proportional distributions of professionalism areas; published scholarship; papers given at professional/learned society meetings; creative works; theater, music, ballet, and sports performance; scholarly publications, lay-oriented public appearances and training groups; service to government, church, and civic groups; service to professional/learned societies; university-connected service; and consultantships. # PREFACE

This study has been long delayed. But it is finished now.

Its delay does not vitiate its interest to the university community. It is a reasonable and good faculty portrait at the end of the FY 1972-1973. Though the survey was done in the fall of 1973, it reflected the work and activity as of Spring 1973, hence it being called a Spring 1973 survey.

This study has the merit of mirroring our faculty character that is reflected beyond the university classroom. This image is one of wide community service, deep institutional involvement, and a healthy commitment to scholarly and creative work by works and deeds. It is an image in which the university can take pride. It may be an image we might wish to change and "improve," if the latter word is appropriate.

The work on this study has been collaborative. But first of all, I am indebted to the faculty respondents who cooperated so well. Also, I am indebted to the Reverend William C. McInnes, S.J., university President; to Dr. Lloyd D. Luckmann, Vice President for Academic Affairs; to Mr. William J. Dillon, former colleague in this office; to Mr. Paul Casias, student programmer; and to Mrs. Fran Nishiguchi, expert typist. My thanks to all.

As it should be, all errors are the author's responsibility.

FACULTY PROFESSIONALISM BEYOND THE UNIVERSITY CLASSROOM

by

James Steve Counelis[+]

Introduction:

Part of the managerial argot in today's American higher education refers to academic productivity. Most contexts of this term refer to measured instructional effort in terms of semester credit hours or student contact hours, especially in relation to some standard of work in a faculty member's contract.

However, for this writer the notion of faculty productivity is far larger than measurable instructional effort (Counelis, 1974). In fact, most colleges and universities believe the same for their rank and tenure policies reflect concern for instruction and its quality, research, and public service, variously construed. Here at the University of San Francisco there is in the faculty handbook references for these concerns. The documentation of this professional activity beyond the university classroom is the goal of this study.

[+]Dr. James Steve Counelis is Director of the Office of Institutional Studies/Management Information and Associate Professor of Education in the School of Education, in the University of San Francisco, San Francisco, California 94117.

The Study Design and Response Quality:

The Reverend William C. McInnes, S.J., President of the University of San Francisco, observed the necessity for knowing the size, character and shape of faculty productivity that was beyond the classroom of the university. In the Fall of 1973 a faculty survey form was designed to get at four types of information for the FY 1972-1973:

(1) Demographic information;

(2) Course instruction;

(3) Extra-mural credit instruction;

(4) Scholarship and service information.

Having reviewed this form with the President and some elements with the Vice-President for Academic Affairs, Dr. Lloyd D. Luckmann, the form was distributed. See Appendix III for the form used. It was in the fourth section of the form that the information of academic professional service beyond the university classroom was contained. But before discussing that element, permit the discussion of the quality of the faculty response.

Chart No. 1 presents the first information on faculty response. Some 216 faculty of a total of 415 responded to this questionnaire. This was an overall 52.1% response. It will be noted that the response rate for full-time faculty varied from an approximate 52% for assistant professors to 100% for instructors. The lecturers/adjunct faculty was predictably lower, 32%. However, for mailed responses, this response rate is quite good when the survey literature on such experience is consulted. Chart No. 1 is in Appendix II.

As was expected, not all faculty respondents listed scholarship and professional service items in the fourth section of the survey. Some 44 faculty members were in this group. Out of this group, 27 or 44% were in the part-time faculty group with titles of lecturers or adjunct faculty. See Chart No. 2 in Appendix II.

There is little doubt that survey respondents are a self-selected group. Hence, there is always the question of the "representativeness" of the sample in terms of the whole population. A few handles to the question of representativeness is possible in this case. Chart No. 3 provides frequency and proportional distributions of the total faculty in Fall 1972, and the survey respondents in terms of six demographic characteristics. These characteristics are:

(1) Sex: Male/female;
(2) Employment status: Full-time/part-time;
(3) University status: Tenured/non-tenured;
(4) Highest earned degree;
(5) Academic rank;
(6) Federal ethnic categories.

Having these comparative distributions, it is possible to use the appropriate statistical test to find out whether those particular differences in proportion and frequencies are statistically significant. Chart No. 4 in Appendix II records these tests and their results.

Succinctly stated in non-technical terms, the survey respondents were representative of the whole faculty in terms of sex, highest earned degrees and federal ethnic categories. A review of Chart No. 3 indicates proportionally that in terms of the total faculty (including part-time personnel), full-time, tenured, and faculty in the first four grades are over-represented in the sample. This is to be expected inasmuch as full-time faculty have stronger ties to the university than part-time personnel. And this is not a bad result. Hence, these consistent results indicate to this writer that the self-selected survey respondents reasonably represent the total faculty mix.

The best response rate to the four sections of the questionnaire indicates that the check-off and short-response demographic section was excellent, as was the fourth section on scholarship and service items. The faculty do not seem to have very good statistical memories for instructional effort measures whether for intra-mural or extra-mural credit instruction. This experience leads this writer to eliminate such items of future questionnaires.

Professionalism Beyond the Classroom:

In accord with this writer's perception that academic professionalism beyond the classroom is of a wide spectrum, a review of the fourth section of this questionnaire is in order.

The fourth section of the questionnaire requested the respondents to write out, in free style, at one item per box the professional work and service activities which the faculty member participated in and accomplished during FY 1972-1973. He was also asked to categorize that item by a letter category system given on the questionnaire. The following are the eleven categories used:

A. Published scholarship: pure, applied, action research (books, journal papers, patents);

B. Papers given at professional/learned society meetings: pure, applied, action research;

C. Creative works: published in written form, displayed, performed;

D. Performance: theatre, music, ballet, sports;

E. Other scholarly publications: extended critical bibliographies, book reviews, audio-visual materials, etc.;

F. Lay-oriented publications;

G. Lay-oriented public appearances & training groups;

H. Service to government, church and civic groups;

I. Service to professional/learned societies;

J. University-connected service: committees, administrative roles, etc.;

K. Consultantships: gratis or contractual.

For purposes of clear text and a certain element of consistency, the texts were typed and edited so that the keypunch operator could read them without difficulty. All faculty coding was retained unless it was obviously out of category by error. The results by faculty name and category are presented in Appendix I. An astounding array of service beyond the classroom is recorded. And it is on this array that the following analysis is made.

Some 1129 separate items were catalogued by 172 respondents. Chart No. 5 in Appendix II presents a frequency and proportional distribution of these items by professorial rank. It is of interest to note that full-time faculty accounted for 91% of the total number of items. Also it is useful to note that the upper three ranks almost have the same distributions, viz., Professor 27.8%, Associate Professor 24.8%, and Assistant Professor 24.0%.

In Appendix II, review Chart No. 6. Therein one finds a frequency and proportional distribution of items by professorial rank for each of the eleven professional scholarship and service categories. In order of rank, the first four categories are:

(1) University-connected service, 24.1%;
(2) Service to government, church and civic groups, 15.3%;
(3) Service to professional/learned societies, 14.7%;
(4) Published Scholarship, 12.8%.

This ordering of the categories reflects very well the university's structure of academic professionalism beyond the classroom. And when one adds the items in the categories of published scholarship and service to professional/learned societies (27.5%), this grouping heads the list and reflects the particular academic orientation of this university.

But more significantly, Chart No. 7 in Appendix II demonstrates the full pattern of scholarship and service beyond the classroom. Most effectively, the pattern appears to be a balanced one with almost equal partition of items among four groupings of items, viz., scholarship, professional service, university-connected service, and public service. And if one adds the items in the first two categories (scholarship and professional service), one sees that just over half of the items are in academic areas with the other half of the items being equally divided into university-connected and public service. There is little question here that the professionalism beyond the classrooms of the university reflects quite well our academic, university-connected, and public service commitments as presented in the University's Credo.

Another facet of the university's professionalization of faculty is found in Chart No. 8 in Appendix II. Therein is calculated an "Academic Professionalism Index" by rank and for the whole university. This index is merely the quotient of the number of items divided by the number of respondents per rank.

The reader will note the clear hierarchical ranking of the university professoriate in terms of this academic professionalism index. And though this result would be an anticipation and hope, it empirically vacates, with some certainty, the argument from silence that sustains such hope and anticipation. This chart provides excellent baseline data for evaluating FY 1973-1974 questionnaire.

In terms of this data, it is useful to note that on the average, professors and associate professors exhibited about the same level of activity for the FY 1972-1973. And the same can be said for assistant professors and instructors. Though proportionally understated, one would not necessarily expect to find part-time faculty to be so enmeshed in professional academic affairs as the full-time faculty. Hence, their lowest station on the academic professionalism index.

In Appendix I, the reader will find under each of the eleven categories the faculty member and the items under that classification. As noted earlier, these texts are those as written by the faculty member. The perusal of these would be of interest in gaining a knowledge and insight as to their scope. Though there are a few errors in these, on the whole the items have been categorized correctly.

Summary Words:

Through this survey of faculty scholarship and service during the FY 1972-1973, much has been learned. The respondents, being fairly representative of the faculty as a whole, described themselves in clear and reasonable terms. With about a third of the faculty items being in scholarly areas (29.7%), the clearly heavy professional service component on campus and external to the university is to be understood and merited. The character and intent of the University of San Francisco is reflected here. If another faculty profile of academic professionalism is sought, the University Priorities Committee and the University Committee on Rank and Tenure will need to restructure the internal values, and operations and procedures to achieve that different profile. From the point of view of future accreditation by the regional accrediting body, the University of San Francisco fully can document its faculty professionalism beyond the university classroom.

FROM: Lloyd D. Luckmann
Acting Vice President for Academic Affairs

DATE: October 29, 1973

SUBJECT: Attached Form

Reverend Fathers, Sisters, Ladies and Gentlemen:

We present herewith a form which will be circulated annually, usually in September, which will enable the University to build a data bank that will be of service to both the faculty and the administrators in meeting the many demands for the various types of information elicited.

This year the request to fill in this form is repetitous for Arts and Science faculty and I apologize for asking again for information on scholarships and services. In the spaces designated for Professional Work please be concise. Your cooperation will save editorial time as only so many words can be computerized.

Each faculty person will receive a print-out of his input each year. Thank you for your cooperation. Please return the form by November 21, 1973 to your respective Dean.

In the interests of efficiency I am returning the data provided by Arts and Science faculty concerning recent research and publication activity.
